PREFACE.

This Vocabulary has grown out of my own need for such a list of words and from the attempts made to supply that need for private use as a missionary among the Konds. It owes a very great deal also to Mr. A. J. Ollenbach, formerly of Phulbani and now Divisional Officer of Angul in Orissa, who most generously placed at my disposal the whole of his valuable collection of Kui words gathered together during more than twenty-five years of administration among the people of the Khondmals. Indeed, it was my hope that the whole of the compilation would be accomplished in close association with Mr. Ollenbach, but his transfer to Angul followed by my own removal to England because of ill-health, has made that impossible. And so the work has had to be carried through without further reference to him; any errors and defects that may appear in it, therefore, are my responsibility, but I welcome this opportunity of expressing my sense of deep indebtedness to his help and encouragement.

INTRODUCTION.

Kui is the language of the Kond (Khond or Kandh) people, who live mainly in the mountainous country that lies between the river Mahanudi in Orissa and the north-west corner of the Vizagapatam District in Madras. It is one of the lesser languages of the great Dravidian group, displaying a very near kinship to Telugu, and preserving in its grammar an essentially Dravidian formation largely unaffected by any Sanskrit or other alien element. Although many of the Konds have lost their mother tongue and speak Oriya or Telugu instead, members of some other castes and tribes, especially those of the Pān caste, domiciled among the Konds have adopted Kui as their language. So that, making allowance for these, it is estimated that the Kui-speaking peoples number 450,000.¹

The majority of these live a simple village life, engaged in the work of the fields and the forest and in providing the domestic necessities of their families and neighbours. Trade is carried on with the people of the plains around them and this is steadily growing. But the Konds still have very little acquaintance with the world at large, most of them are animists in religion, and their social organisation rarely progresses beyond the village community or the group of villages in a small section of the country. All this is reflected in their vocabulary. It abounds in terms for concrete objects, but contains few for abstract ideas; geographical phenomena that lie outside their perception of hill and vale and sky are unnamed; it is not easy to find Kui words in which to express any depth of religious experience, or philosophic thought; native terminology for the greater social ideas such as government, kingdom, nation or race, if ever it existed, has been lost.

Contact with other people is increasing, however, and intellectual and spiritual understanding advancing with education and the impact of other religions. Thus the Konds are finding a need for fresh terms and phrases with which to express their widening experience. And an attempt is being made to meet this new demand by extending the connotation of some common words; for example, the word gebga, to associate with, is being used as the equivalent of to have faith in, and the meaning of jāpa, to beg, expanded to include prayer. But such a process of expansion is a slow one and only possible with a restricted number of words. Readier assistance lies to hand in the Oriya language, which, while surrounding the Kond country on three sides, is invading it through commerce, civil administration and the numerous colonies of Oriya people who have settled among the Konds. Oriya as an Aryan language is alien to Kui, but it comes to it as the main linguistic medium for higher social and religious influences from without. Kui, therefore, is inevitably borrowing words from Oriya. Some of them are so corrupted in the process of adoption that it is difficult at times to recognise their derivation. In any case Kui pronunciation of certain vowels and consonants demands changes that become apparent even in words least altered in their transference from Oriya. Among such changes the following are common: Aspirated consonants are changed to their corresponding unaspirated forms, an initial h is dropped, ch and sh become s, b sometimes changes to v, ḍ to ṛ, ō to ū, and the Oriya inherent vowel is often pronounced a in Kui.

In this Vocabulary words and phrases known to be derived from or connected with Oriya are marked (O.). They number somewhat less than 12% of the whole and for the most part are words that have become naturalized throughout the Kond Hills. In some districts a larger proportion of Oriya words are intermingled in the ordinary speech of the Konds and in other parts the proportion is less; the fluctuation depends on the amount of contact the hillmen of any given locality have with Oriya people. but, speaking generally, the Oriya influence is more marked in the north and north-east of the Kond country and less in the west and south-west. Though Oriya has thus affected the vocabulary of Kui, no important grammatical development seems traceable to its impact. It is remarkable, too, that with a few possible exceptions, there are no Oriya derivatives among the Kui verbs, for when verbs are taken over from Oriya they are attached as adjectives or adverbs to one or other of the Kui verbs āva, giva, inba, or ispa.

The limitations of the Kui vocabulary are obvious, but they can easily be exaggerated. The complaint may be offered, for example, that as only one word, ēlu, serves for mind, reason, thought, understanding and wisdom, considerable ambiguity and confusion must result in usage. But the difficulty is more imaginary than real; for differentiation of meaning is obtained by combining ēlu with appropriate verbs, which in their infinitives provide the equivalents of new abstract nouns and by their numerous parts allow the word a varied activity. The same might be said with emphasis of jēḍa, love, heart, spirit. Over forty examples are to be gathered from the printed Vocabulary of how this word is used together with verbs and other parts of speech to afford a flexibility in language of a psychological order that goes beyond one's reasonable expectation. Again, the somewhat elaborate use that Kui makes of particles permits of a terse and vivid style of speech that is pleasing and effective; thus, eanike oṭe esekave man-gēnu compares favourably with its English equivalent, I will never go and stay with him again.

Verbs are of outstanding importance in Kui because with all their ramifications they possess such a wealth of possible meaning. They are represented in the Vocabulary by their Infinitives only, from which all other parts may be deduced, but it is well to remember that the Infinitive itself is frequently used as a noun, and sometimes as adjective and adverb; while from the Verbal Participles adverbial and conjunctive expressions are formed and the Relative Participles become the bases of adjectival, adverbial, relative, conditional, causative, appellative and hortative expressions¹. It is evident, therefore, that a single verb, appearing in the printed Vocabulary as one Infinitive only, may add a remarkable variety to actual speech. This must be borne in mind when estimating the wealth of the Kond man's spoken vocabulary.

The Infinitive of a Transitive verb is very often used as a noun and is then almost invariably active in meaning and cannot be made to represent the passive object of the verb's action. For example, the English word sacrifice may be a verb, to sacrifice; or a noun representing an activity, the act of sacrificing; or a noun indicating the object of that act, something sacrificed. But the Kui Infinitive lāka may only represent the first two of those meanings, to sacrifice or the act of sacrificing; for the third meaning an Appellative noun formed from the affirmative Relative Participle would be employed, lākinari, something to be sacrificed, or lāka manari, something that has been sacrificed. There are a few exceptions to this general rule, however, such as tinba, to eat, which may as a noun mean both the act of eating and food. Comparatively few Infinitives of Intransitive verbs can be commonly employed as nouns. When it is possible they usually have an abstract significance, as, for example, abga, to be fitting, or suitability.

The Konds have a peculiar habit of using certain words in pairs, one as the counterpart or balance word of the other. This is called by them rāppa. The paired words are frequently, though by no means always, employed together; the principal, or stronger of the two, precedes its associate, and may always be used alone, but many of the subordinate words are found only in connection with their more important partners. This idiom is common in ordinary speech and is a special mark of lyrics, dirges and priestly incantations. The Vocabulary provides the following interesting examples:—

ake boḍu,	elders.
alāri balāri,	fatigue.
dāda kōka,	brethren, elders.
dāta bōpo,	power.
dēva āra,	large store basket.
dono dorbo,	household possessions.
iḍu kumbu,	household.
iṭa rohpa,	to store.
jēda pāra,	affection.
kali ḍoo,	leaf-cup.
kanari bogari,	a noise.
katta barta,	conversation.
kēpa klēga,	sorcery.
kila bila,	a noise.
kuna nāpa,	a tuber.
kūsa bōro,	greens.

kuṭka betka,	instigation.
lāka sōka,	sacrifice.
lōku bāku,	folk.
mīḍa bōḍa,	family.
mīḍa ḍōṭi,	family.
ōṛe neo,	outside.
pakoṛi sakoṛi,	shoulder blade.
plāpa āspa,	question and answer. prāpa ṛupka,	to sell.
prēnu kūtu,	a bone.
ṛīva klāpa,	wailing.
sahpa kospa,	a thrashing. sāleṛi būleṛi,	a centipede.
sāva mrūva,	death.
sēru āla,	a yoke of oxen.
sēru mrāsu,	a yoke of oxen.
sēru rūdu,	a yoke of oxen. siḷa pōru,	a quarrel.
siṇḍa bōṛa,	clothing.
siru kūru,	water. sunja ṭēra,	sleep.
ṭeki bandi,	pots and pans.

Some well-marked phonetic changes particularly to liquid consonants and the aspirate are revealed in the local differences of vocabulary mentioned above. The following examples may be given:—

¹ It may be studied in the works of the Rev. F. V. P. Schulze. Kuvi Grammar, Madras 1911; and Vocabulary of the Kuvi-Kond Language, Madras, 1913.

INTRODUCTION.

1. r sometimes changes to n.

ākori	become-	ākoni.
ānjoṛi	„	ānjoni.
āsoṛi	„	āsoni.
baḍuṛi	„	baḍuni.
ḍipeṛi	„	ḍipeni.
īsoṛi	„	īsoni.
kinḍoṛi	„	kinḍoni.
konḍoṛi	„	konḍoni.
pangeṛi	„	pangeni.
pūṛenji	„	pūnenji.
sēkeṛi	„	sēkeni.
sīreṛi	„	sīreni.
siruṛi	„	siruni.

(2) r sometimes changes to ṛ.

bōṛa	becomes	bōṇa.
bōṛi	„	bōṇi.
gōṛi	„	gōṇi.
sīṛa	„	sīṇa.

(3) r sometimes changes to ṭ.

ārpa	becomes	āṭpa.
maṛpa	„	maṭpa.
puṛpa	„	puṭpa.
pūṛpa	„	pūṭpa.
ūrpa	„	uṭpa.

(4) r sometimes changes to l.

āsoṛi	becomes	āsoli.
īsoṛi	„	īsoli.
luṛi	„	luli.

(5) r sometimes changes to l.

deori	becomes	deoli.
ṭīṭeri	„	ṭīṭeli.

(6) ḍ sometimes changes to l.

baiḍi	becomes	baili.
giḍa	„	gila.
jēḍa	„	jēla.
jīḍa	„	jīla.
keḍu	„	kelu.
meḍu	„	melu.
mīḍa	„	mīla.
mūḍa	„	mūla.
paḍu	„	palu.
pāḍu	„	pālu.
vaḍi	„	vali.
viḍu	„	vilu.

- (7) d sometimes changes to j.

gredi	becomes	greji.
gunderi	„	gunjeri.

- (8) h sometimes changes to s.

brehna	becomes	bresna.
goha	„	gosa.
kruhpa	„	kṛuspa.
kruhu	„	krusu.
trehpa	„	trespa.
viha	„	visa.

- (9) Some liquid consonants are transposed for the sake of euphony.

brūnga	becomes	būrnga.
brungi	„	burngi.
kliu	„	kilu.
kriu	„	kiru.
krua	„	kuṛa.
plīpa	„	pīlpa.
pṛiu	„	piṛu.
vliu	„	vilu.

- (10) Some vowels are changed.

geha	becomes	guha.
gepka	„	gupka.
gōpka	„	gepka.
guhpa	„	gohpa.

The aspirate is not generally used initially in Kui, so that no words appear in the Vocabulary under the letter h. But a few words that in the eastern areas of the Kond country begin with s change that letter to h in the western areas.

E.g..	salba,	to go	becomes	halba.
	sāpu,	a thorn	„	hāpu.
	siḍa,	not to be	„	hiḍa.
	sīronji,	water	„	hironji.
	sīva,	to give	„	hiva.

EXPLANATORY NOTES.

The words in this Vocabulary are arranged alphabetically in accordance with the sequence of the English letters. Those beginning with the Cerebrals ṭ, ḍ and ṛ are not separated from those beginning with t, d and r respectively, but the order is determined by the succeeding vowel or consonant. If, however, two or more words are alike except for the cerebral or non-cerebral letters, ṭ is regarded as coming before t, ḍ before d, and ṛ before r. Short vowels have the precedence of corresponding long vowels.

The Conjugation of all verbs is indicated by the Roman figures I, II, III, and IV, and the section under which Fourth Conjugation verbs fall is shown by the additional figures 1 to 8, so that they may easily be conjugated by reference to the paradigms of the type verbs in the author's A Grammar of the Kui Language, pp. 69-84: which see also for an explanation of Plural Action Forms, pp. 142-145, and of Balance Words, p. 146. The plural forms of nouns and pronouns are given in full.

Some expressions included in the Vocabulary are combinations of Oriya derivatives and pure Kui words. They are marked (O) to indicate the Oriya connection (see p. viii), but, of course, it is not intended to suggest by this that the true Kui words in these expressions are also derived from the Oriya language. For example, in āsa giva, to hope, āsa is Oriya and giva is Kui; in poṭos inba, to burst, poṭos alone is Oriya, inba is Kui.

For explanation of words marked (P.) and (B.) see page x.

The following scheme of letters is adopted for Kui words :—
